

Chief Justice Maraga Urges Students to Shun Drugs Abuse

The Chief Justice of Kenya, David Maraga has advised university students against drug and substance abuse, which he warned, could easily compromise their academic and social development. Maraga decried that despite the existence of legislations aimed at curbing drug trafficking in the country, the menace was growing in intensity; consuming young people and destroying families, especially youth of between 25 and 35 years who are in their prime and could be relied upon to secure the country's socio-economic prosperity.
